

ABSTRACT

The invention relates to a catalyst body with one or several layer elements with etched cavities, through which flowing media may flow, such as for example, pores or channels. The cavities are essentially arranged perpendicular to the layer elements and the production is by means of etching methods from semiconductor technology.